This lowset timber cottage is one of three houses built just after the turn of the century by Robin Dods, the eminent architect of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Robert Smith Dods (Robin) bought the land on which these houses stood in August 1897. The land was then an area of 1 rood 8.6 perches. A further 1.6 perches was added in January 1900. Robin Dods and his wife Mary lived in New Farm and evidently built these houses as an investment.

History

This lowset timber cottage is one of three houses built just after the turn of the century by Robin Dods, the eminent architect of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Dods returned to Brisbane in 1894 after studying architecture in Edinburgh and working in London. He began a partnership with Francis Richard Hall in 1896 and together they are credited with revolutionising architecture in Brisbane. They designed and built a number of houses and cottages in Bowen Hills in the following years as well as more famous institutional buildings, particularly for the Anglican Diocese.

Robert Smith Dods (Robin) bought the land on which these houses stood in August 1897. The land was then an area of 1 rood 8.6 perches. A further 1.6 perches was added in January 1900. Robin Dods and his wife Mary lived in New Farm and evidently built these houses as an investment. The occupants of the houses regularly changed over the following years and the houses seem to have remained investment properties after the Dods' sold them in 1919 – the year the land was subdivided.
