Within the site known today as Gallipoli Barracks, are several historically significant structures – the magazine complex, All Saints Chapel and small arms store. The land on which the Enoggera Army Camp, as it was first known, was established, was acquired by the Commonwealth Government in 1908 for the training and accommodation of troops in its attempt to form a national defence force. The significant structures remaining on the site were constructed between 1910 and 1916. The Gallipoli Barracks are significant as the training ground for thousands of Queenslanders who served in wars throughout the twentieth century.
